General information and guidelines

Proto-Indo-European Linguistics (PIEL) – Urindogermanische Sprachforschungen, established in 2016, is an international scientific journal accepting contributions in English and German for the time being.

PIEL (<http://pielinguistics.org>) specializes in Indo-European (IE) languages and the reconstruction of Proto-Indo-European (PIE). We are especially interested in phonology, morphology, etymology, sound laws, and semantic questions.

PIEL is free, article-based, open source and only published online. We focus on philological, linguistic and digital aspects of IE and PIE, and are strongly committed to the comparative method of reconstruction and natural science. With regard to these issues, the contributors are advised to consult the article Preface to Proto-Indo-European Linguistics, where further details on these aims are provided.

Contributors' guidelines for submitting an article

1. Articles may be written in English or German.
2. Please submit your article as identical Word and pdf documents.
3. Only Unicode symbols of a single Unicode font should be used.
4. Keep the layout as simple as possible (reduce the use of bold type, underlines, and different types of headings).
5. Instead of endnotes use footnotes. Please do not use them for references, but only for additional comments. Short references should be added directly in the text in full form instead of 'ibid.', 'op. cit.', 'loc. cit.' etc.

6. A language needs not to be in italics, if preceded by an abbreviation of that language (Hitt. ḫa-aš-šu-uš), otherwise in italics (ḫa-aš-šu-uš).
7. Meanings and translations are given in ‘single’ quotation marks, while quoted text is given in “double” quotation marks. Various brackets such as < ḫa-aš-šu-uš > for the orthographic, /ḫaššuš/ for the phonemic and [ḫašuš] for the phonetic form can also be used without italics, if the source language has already been identified. Since the form and/or meaning of many words is disputed, a reference to the source dictionary with the original translation in any language is appreciated.
8. An article should be prefaced with an abstract.
9. A full list of bibliographical references should be given at the end of the article, using the format of the examples below:
